Leadership Corner

GEN Gus Perna
Commanding General
U.S. Army Materiel Command

In my column two months ago, I committed to remain personally involved in improving housing conditions on Army installations, and ensuring safe and secure housing for our residents.

While the summer months taught us important lessons about surging our efforts during peak PCS season, I am encouraged about the direction we are moving. We still have much work to do to gain back the trust and confidence of our Soldiers and their families, and rest assured – this is an enduring priority for me and our Army senior leaders. We are in this for the long haul.

In July, we received the results of the privatized and Army-owned housing survey. More than 25,000 residents provided input that gave the Army tremendous insight into housing experiences, both positive and negative. Read More: <https://www.army.mil/article/226620/>
